Actor, coach and writer with 20 years' experience of using theatre in training

Meg started her career in management training, then took three years out to study Theatre, Film and Television at Bristol University. On graduating she began a career combining work as a professional actor and director with work as a corporate actor and coach – this time specialising in sales, customer service, management skills and leadership.

She has extensive experience in writing, directing and acting in forum theatre, business simulations and corporate role-play. She designs highly interactive training interventions. She is an accomplished and positive coach, supportive when necessary and challenging where appropriate.

Meg works throughout the UK and internationally, having had corporate assignments all over Europe, in North and South America, Asia and Africa. Recent clients include Oxford University Press, BSkyB, British Gas, the NEC, Centro, Arval, Fischer and Paykel, Unicef, RWE npower, UKHO, Bristol University, and the University of the West of England.

She has a Theatre Company specialising in improvised storytelling theatre, and has recently completed her PGCert coach training.

She is based near Bristol, in North Somerset.

3 words Meg's friends would use to describe her are creative, loyal and tenacious.

Her greatest achievement is keeping a sense of fun and excitement through adversity.

And her favourite television programme as a child was Lost in Space!
